Arlington Dairy Day scheduled for December 12

The 11th Annual UW Arlington Dairy Day will be held at the Arlington Agricultural Research Station (N695 Hopkins Road, Arlington, WI) Wednesday, December 12th.

The event is an opportunity for dairy producers and service industry professionals to learn how University research can help them to increase dairy herd profitability, health and productivity. Arlington Dairy Day is sponsored by the UW-Extension Dairy Team and the UW-Madison Department of Dairy Science. The program showcases the latest dairy-related research findings from various departments of the UW-Madison College of Ag & Life Sciences.

- Molds and Mycotoxins Mark Cook, Department of Animal Science
- What can I afford to pay for land? Bruce Jones, Department off Agricultural & Applied Economics

Participants will also choose to participate in 4 of 6 breakout session presentations:

- Intramammary Infection Across the Dry Period Pamela Ruegg, Department of Dairy Science
- Biology and Effects of Spontaneous Heating in Hay, Wayne Coblenz, USDA Dairy Forage Research Center
- Feeding Byproducts – Deal or No Deal, Lou Armentano, Department of Dairy Science
- Raw Milk Influences Finished Product Quality, Scott Rankin, Department of Food Science
- Optimizing Reproductive Efficiency Using New Management Programs, Milo Wiltbank, Department of Dairy Science
- Handling Sand Laden Manure, Brian Holmes, Department of Biological Systems Engineering

Arlington Dairy Day brochures with registration form, map and program details are available from your county UW-Extension Office. An electronic version of the brochure may also be down loaded from the UW-Madison Dairy Science website: <http://www.wisc.edu/dysci>

The program registration fee is $25 per person if sent by November 30th and $35 per person if sent after that date or paid at the door. The fee includes refreshments, lunch and program proceedings. Checks should be made payable to UW-Madison and sent to:
